YOUR TURN

Each creature can take a move action, a maneuver, and a main action on their turn — in any order

You can also take one triggered action per round when the trigger happens. There is no limit to the number of free triggered actions you can take.

CLASS FEATURES

Routines

You enter every battle with a set of performance abilities at the ready. Performances are magical presentations (such as songs, dances, poems, or gymnastic feats) that your allies can participate in. These abilities have the Performance keyword. At the start of each combat round, as long as you are not dazed, dead, or surprised, you can either choose a new performance or maintain your current performance (no action required). Your performance lasts until you are unable to maintain it or until the end of the encounter.

Scene Partner

Whenever you obtain a success on a test to interact with an NPC using a skill from the interpersonal group, you can form a bond with that NPC. When you enter into a negotiation with a bonded NPC, their patience increases by 1 (to a maximum of 5). Additionally, the first time during a negotiation that you personally make an argument that would increase a bonded NPC's interest by 1, you instead increase their interest by 2 (to a maximum of 5).

SLAMMING INTO OBJECTS

When a creature force moves a target into a stationary object that is the target's size or larger and the object doesn't break (see below), the movement ends and the target takes 2 damage plus 1 damage for each square remaining in their forced movement.

If you force move a creature downward into an object that doesn't break (including the ground), they also take falling damage as if they had fallen the distance force moved and their Agility score was 0.

Hurling through objects: When you move a creature into a mundane object, the object can break depending on how many squares of forced movement remain. The cost of being slammed into an object is tied to the damage a target takes for being hurled through it:

- It costs 1 remaining square of forced movement to destroy 1 square of glass. The creature moved takes 3 damage.
- It costs 3 remaining squares of forced movement to destroy 1 square of wood. The creature moved takes 5 damage.
- It costs 6 remaining squares of forced movement to destroy 1 square of stone. The creature moved takes 8 damage.
- It costs 9 remaining squares of forced movement to destroy 1 square of metal. The creature moved takes 11 damage.

If any forced movement remains after the object is destroyed, you can continue to move the creature who destroyed the object.

MAIN ACTIONS

Any creature can take the following main actions, in addition to those listed in their stats:

- Charge: Move up to your speed in a straight line without shifting, and can then make a melee free strike or use an ability with the Charge keyword against a creature when you end your move.
- Defend: All ability power rolls made against you have a double bane until the start of your next turn. You gain no benefit from this action while another creature is taunted by you.
- Free Strike: You make a free strike.
- Heal: Choose an adjacent creature who can spend a Recovery or make a saving throw.
- Trade: You can convert your main action into a maneuver or move action, allowing you to take two maneuvers or move actions on your turn.

EDGES AND BANES

Edge: If you have a situational advantage (edge) on a power roll, the roll gains +2.

Double Edge: If you have two or more edges, the roll is one tier higher instead.

Bane: If you have a situational disadvantage (bane) on a power roll, the roll gains -2.

Double Bane: If you have two or more banes, the roll is one tier lower instead.

- If you have an edge and a bane or a double edge and a double bane, the roll is made normally without any edges or banes.
- If you have a double edge and a bane, the roll has one edge.
- If you have a double bane and an edge, the roll has one bane.

SLAMMING INTO CREATURES

When you force move a creature into another creature, the movement ends and both creatures take 1 damage for each square remaining in the first creature's forced movement. You can also force move an object into a creature. The object's movement ends, and the creature takes 1 damage for each square remaining in the object's forced movement.

It's possible to move a creature or object of a larger size into several creatures of a smaller size at the same time. When this happens, the larger creature in the collision takes damage only once, not once for each smaller creature they slam into.

If a creature is killed by damage from an ability or effect that also force moves them, a second creature they are slammed into still takes damage unless the Director deems otherwise.

You can force move another creature into yourself with a pull or a slide.
